War Comes To The Rockies

IN PERFECT unity and collaboration with the United States, the Canadian armed forces have embarked upon a plan of campaign for the joint defense of North American soil. From East to West and North to South, on both sides of the border, preparations are quietly but steadily proceeding and any potential invader can expect a hot reception. Even among the peaks of the Canadian Rockies, battle practice is taking place.
The photograph shows a Universal Carrier, one of Canada's sturdy, well-pieces of mechanized transport working its way through a high pass in the Rockies. These machines which were used with great effect in Britain's North African drive against Italy, can move at 50 miles an hour over the roughest kind of ground.
